

ABSTRACT

The present invention provides a process for performing automatic inspection of advanced design photomasks. In a preferred embodiment, an aerial image of a portion of a photomask is generated. A simulated image corresponding to original pattern data is also generated. The aerial image and simulated image are then compared and discrepancies are detected as possible defects.